

HUGHES' COURT WORK FINISHED

All Opinions Assigned Him Completed Before He Resigned Seat.

The final conference of the Supreme Court before adjournment on Monday, was held, according to an old custom, at the home of Chief Justice White last night. Justice Hughes, having resigned, was not present. He had completed all opinions assigned to him and these were turned over to the chief justice to be read on Monday.

Justice Hughes, in his service on the Supreme Bench, has delivered a number of striking opinions. He announced the decision of the court in the Minnesota rate cases. A dissenting opinion in a fake patent medicine case practically resulted in the amendment of the pure food law to include patent medicines. It has been pointed out that his dissenting opinion in the Frank case, in which he held that Frank was entitled to a retrial, his opinion in the Oklahoma "Jim Crow" case, which was held to be unconstitutional, and in the Arizona "alien labor case," all may serve to indicate his attitude on certain problems of current interest.

Justice Hughes is the fourth member of the court to resign since the death of Chief Justice Marshall.

The first was John Jay, the second, Benjamin R. Curtis, and the third, J. A. Campbell, of Georgia.

A torrential rain in the early evening dispersed the throngs who loitered in the vicinity of the Hughes house, hoping to catch a glimpse of the candidate. Inside, however, Justice Hughes was hard at work, receiving and replying to messages of congratulation.

PIMPLY TETTER ON HANDS AND FEET

Would Itch and Burn So Badly Could Not Sleep. Dared Not Put Hands in Water. Ashamed of Them.

HEALED BY CUTICURA SOAP AND OINTMENT

"I was troubled with tetter. It first began by very small bumps or pimples coming on my hands and feet. Large pimples would form and become awfully sore. I could not sleep at night the pimples would itch and burn so badly. I dared not put my hands in water for they would burn and itch so. I was ashamed to let any one see my hands they were so rough and sore, and I could not wear any clothing on the affected parts. Finally saw Cuticura Soap and Ointment advertisement and I got a large sized box of Cuticura Soap and a cake of soap and in two months my hands and feet were perfectly healed." (Signed) J. B. Dickerson, Brookhaven, Miss., July 8, 1915.

convention over several candidates, including Hughes, but who went into obscurity after retiring from the Taft Cabinet in 1912. The fact of the matter is that Hitchcock was scarcely heard of in succeeding years until he reached up the air and the Hughes boom.

Now his old enemies have renewed their activities against him and already lines are being drawn to prevent his selection as chairman of the Republican National Committee.

The fight with the committee came at the first meeting after Hughes was nominated. The meeting was held in the Coliseum. Murray Crane presided. Plans had been laid by Hitchcock's opponents for a complete reorganization of the committee at once, including the appointment of the executive committee which should choose the officers and the chairman. After a sharp discussion it was finally decided to appoint a committee to confer with Justice Hughes and not to name the executive committee for the campaign or other officers until after he had been consulted and had approved the selection.

The following committee, with former Senator Murray Crane, of Massachusetts, as chairman, was named: Ralph E. Williams, of Oregon; Alvah H. Martin, of Virginia; Charles B. Warren, of Michigan; John B. Adams, of Iowa; Senator Reed Smoot, of Utah; Senator Boies Penrose, of Pennsylvania; and James A. Hendaw, of Indiana.

Mr. Hitchcock's friends admitted, after the names of the subcommittee were announced, that the personnel did not look very encouraging to them.

Friends of Mr. Hitchcock who have directed the Hughes campaign at the convention, and who directed the organization of Hughes sentiment throughout the country, said today that he would not seek for any part in the direction of the campaign. It is understood, however, that Gov. Whitman will oppose any effort to humiliate Mr. Hitchcock.

G. O. P. ELEPHANT IN HUGHES DRAWING ROOM

Upon the assumption that a man's character may be read in his environment, callers at the house of Justice Hughes found much material yesterday upon which to base predictions of his future acts.

On table in the drawing-room was an ivory elephant, which might have been cherished as an emblem of the Republican party. On a bookcase in the library was an empty brass cartridge case for a three-inch field gun. Scattered among the rows of law books were volumes on nature study, sociological subjects, social, political and economic studies.

Far from confining himself to the study of legal precedent, Justice Hughes is interested in a variety of subjects.

MOOSE MOVEMENT FACES OBLIVION

Roosevelt's Declining of Nomination Sounds Death Knell for Party.

By HUGH S. MILLER. (International News Service.) Chicago, June 10.—Theodore Roosevelt today notified the Progressive national convention that he could not accept his nomination for President.

His statement, which was not unexpected by those in his confidence, struck dismay to the hearts of the leaders of the cause and to the mass and file of the delegates to the convention, who had counted on him as their candidate in the coming campaign.

Col. Roosevelt's intimation that everything depended upon the position Justice Hughes should take, coupled with the later publication of a comprehensive statement, given out by the latter in Washington, was everywhere accepted as definite assurance that he will desert the Progressives and support the Republican candidate.

Everywhere, also, there was a sentiment that the decision announced by Col. Roosevelt dooms the Progressive party, which polled a tremendous vote four years ago, to oblivion.

The receipt of Col. Roosevelt's statement made the last few hours of the Progressive convention an incident more dramatic, perhaps, than anything that has ever happened in the political history of this country.

Take Roosevelt's Message. While the hundreds of delegates and thousands of guests were cheering the name of the man who had led them since the creation of the party, while they applauded to the echo the enthusiastic words of Victor Murdock, Col. John M. Parker, Raymond Robins and others who eloquently urged them to keep the faith, and even while they were going wholeheartedly through the program of nominating Col. Parker as the running mate of their candidate for the Presidency, a little group of leaders was engaged in taking from Col. Roosevelt's own lips the words that were to bring the structure, erected laboriously but lovingly, down about their ears.

The news was kept from the convention until the very last minute of its session. George W. Perkins and the other leaders who had talked with Col. Roosevelt over the long distance telephone knew long before the convention assembled the nature of the unpleasant task before them.

The convention may 15 minutes after 3 o'clock for its last session. There remained for it the last task of nominating a Vice President and disposing of a few routine matters.

Parker Is Nominated. Eventually came time for nominations for Vice President. The name of Col. John M. Parker, of Louisiana, long a friend of Col. Roosevelt, was placed in nomination.

Gov. Hiram Johnson, of California, who led the ticket four years ago with Col. Roosevelt, was also named, but he asked the convention to place his name aside and endorse Col. Parker.

Then the convention named Col. Parker for Vice President without a dissenting voice and was happy.

Chairman Robins stepped forward and said: "I shall now read a communication from Col. Roosevelt."

And read it he did. The convention listened in absolute silence. At the end there was the briefest possible pause and then a few cheers.

That was all.

Down came the hammer on the block of wood on the kitchen table and Chairman Robins stepped forward and said: "The chair announces the Progressive national convention is adjourned sine die."

"I'M OUT OF POLITICS," SAYS COL. ROOSEVELT

him, then the conditional refusal would become absolute. "I leave it to the party to decide," he said.

"Then your decision is not final yet?"

Decision Not Final.

"No, my decision is not final yet," he said in a hopeless sort of way, as if he were repeating something somebody else had said rather than a sentiment of his own. Then, straightening up a little, he said with a show of vigor: "I am not going to yield pay gravel."

"And will you say nothing about Justice Hughes' statement?"

No, he would say nothing. But the correspondents who had talked to the Colonel every day for the last week felt that the statement lacked the fire and definite Americanism which Roosevelt wanted. Asked if he had any idea as to when the Progressive convention would communicate with him, he said he had none. He pointed out that his suggestion of Senator Henry Cabot Lodge as a compromise candidate had been presented to the Republican convention before the final ballot for Justice Hughes had been taken.

He explained that at 4 o'clock this morning over the telephone he had talked with two of the Progressives and two of the Republicans conferees, and that then the Colonel had made the compromise suggestion. At the time, said the Colonel, the suggestion seemed to be just what the Republican conferees wanted, but that later the same conferees went back to the convention and joined in the nomination of Justice Hughes.

Tells Reporters Good-by.

"And now, gentlemen," he said, rounding himself, "I'll say good-by. There's no use of your coming up here again or staying in town." He stepped forward holding out his hand to the nearest newspaper man. "I have nothing to say," he said, "but you'll have something to say when the Progressive committee reports to you," he was told.

"Maybe, but that news will come from them. Good-by."

Then began a series of vigorous handshakes.

"I have to see you go-for you add to the scenic features of Oyster Bay."

He followed the correspondents out on the porch, stood there as they trooped down the steps and it was then that the photographer asked him to pose, and got the reply: "No, no; no pictures. I am out of politics."

As the men turned down the road they saw the Colonel walk slowly back into the house, leaving unanswered the question as to whether he would support Justice Hughes.
